❏ – Is the majority (90%) of the supplied text included on your site?
   (A few text items can be edited out for clarity, for example, if there's not enough information about frisbee golf to make a page about it, you might want to drop all references to that to build a sensible site.

❏ – Is the text broken up with an occasional image?
   (If the page is all text, it's not very appealing to a potential skier.) I'd go for at least four images per page.

❏ – Does the header and footer stretch across all screen sizes (100%), and does main stay in the center (having a max-width)?

   – Are the images actually sized to fit your plan?
❏   Please don't drop in the images without sizing them.

   – Does the site have one CSS file?

   – Are media Screens working?
   There should be three at a minimum.
   – Has the text been carefully tagged?
   Are you using all of the text tags available to you (i, b, em, strong, etc)?

❏ – Is the metadata complete?

❏ – What level of interactivity has been added?
   Minimum interactivity is required (this includes making links change when hovering over them)

❏ – How well does your navigation work?
   Does it react to media screen size changes?

❏ – Are all pages linked, can a user easily get back and forth between pages, or are some links not working?

❏ – Consider adding any of the optional material to the site?
   (Weather widget, carousel, etc)

❏ – Does the site have a professional feel?
   Compare with the best ski resort sites you can find.
